International Press Correspondence ('Imprecor') was the weekly journal of Communist International, published in several languages, including an English edition which was published by the Communist Party Of Great Britain. Later this edition was replaced by a journal of The Communist Party of Great Britain under the title News and Views, later World News, later Comment, and now Focus.

'Imprecor' is one of the main sources of the document of the Communist International and of the different parties that composed it. It contains articles by leading Communists and very full accounts of the activities of the revolutionary trade union and of Socialist political developments in different parts of the world. It is also a main source of information on various parts of the world. It provides the main information on various international campaigns. Some issues in the early years are lacking.

World News and Views, World News, Comment and Focus continue to cover in much the same way the international Communist movement and affairs, but devote more space to British politics, especially the Labour, Trade Union and Communist Movements.
